Introduction

In Connecticut, substance use remains a significant public health issue. While alcohol and cannabis use among youth and young adults in Connecticut have remained stable or trended downward over the past decade, they have remained consistently higher than the United States over time. Understanding the current landscape of preventive measures is crucial to provide a foundation for strategic planning, enabling policymakers, healthcare providers, and community organizations to allocate resources more efficiently, tailor interventions to specific needs, and ultimately reduce the incidence of substance use disorders.

With funding from the American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA), the Connecticut Department of Mental Health and Addiction Services partnered with Center for Prevention Evaluation and Statistics (CPES) at UConn Health to conduct a comprehensive assessment of alcohol, tobacco, and other drug (ATOD) primary prevention programs and services provided across the state. This initiative led to the creation of a publicly accessible, searchable electronic resource and an interactive, filterable map, which catalogs the findings and lists available substance use primary prevention resources by town. Table 1 outlines the key stakeholders who are the primary intended users of these materials.

State-Wide Prevention Resources

Connecticut’s substance use primary prevention infrastructure is managed by the Department of Mental Health and Addiction Services (DMHAS) Prevention and Health Promotion (PHP) division. The DMHAS PHP utilizes federal block grant and discretionary funding to support primary prevention at the state, regional, and local levels. These efforts include state-level initiatives, websites, and social marketing campaigns, Regional Behavioral Health Action Organizations (RBHAOs), and resource links to inform and support the work of DMHAS-funded community prevention initiatives, such as Local Prevention Councils (LPCs) and prevention-focused community coalitions. The primary focus of these initiatives is on youth, but they also target young adults, parents, and the general population. While DMHAS is the primary state agency responsible for substance use primary prevention, other state agencies, including the Department of Children and Families (DCF) and the State Department of Education, engage in related prevention strategies that address substance use prevention, risk factors, and protective/resilience factors.

Regional and Town Prevention Resources

RBHAO and LPC Mission

To optimize resources and enhance integration concerning the planning, training, advocacy, and development of mental health and substance use programs, the RBHAOs are funded to carry out their statutory roles as strategic community partners operating throughout the behavioral healthcare continuum. Within one of DMHAS' Uniform Regions, each RBHAO will oversee a variety of planning, instruction, and advocacy tasks related to behavioral health needs and services for community members across the lifespan.

Local Prevention Councils (LPCs) aim to promote the development and implementation of community-based prevention initiatives mostly directed towards youths and raise public knowledge of ATOD prevention. In their community programs, LPC programs employ a minimum of two of the six preventative techniques specified by CSAP, which include program identification and referral, education, community-based procedures, alternative programming, environmental, and information dissemination.

How to Use Tool:

To use the tool below and find prevention resources within a specific community or region, you will find all towns in the state of Connecticut listed in alphabetic order with their corresponding region and community type. By clicking on the town names, you will be directed to the contact information for prevention resources specially within the town, while clicking on the region will bring you to the Regional Behavior Health Action Organization (RBHAO) contact information as well as all other towns found within that region. To return to the tool, click any town name within the contact list.
